

The Soul Shall Not Prevail

For these many months I have longed to communicate with you My son, but your soul rose up as a giant in the land to defeat the new man, the new creation on the inside of you. As Goliath stood before David, so your soul stands as a giant before your spirit. Through intimidation, through fear and weakness, and through fear of death your soul now challenges all that is of God within you. It stands before you stating that your spirit man shall advance no further. But hear Me says the Lord, you and I shall conquer the soul. It shall dismount and loose the reins from off your life and it shall become the soul of meekness, the servant who runs alongside, subservient to the son of God that you truly are.

Change

From your spirit you earnestly pray for My will to be done in your life. Yet your old man adamantly resists the change that is necessary to bring forth My will. To resist change is to delay My will. To permanently resist change is to never accomplish My will. The old man would rather trust in the security of known present circumstances, even if those circumstances are not the desire of your heart, than to trust in the unknown circumstances that would result from following the leadership of My Spirit. The number one desire of the old man is self preservation. Beyond all else, the old man fears death. That is why he so fears change. He is not willing, nor will he ever be willing, to surrender any degree of control he has over your life. He knows full well that every step you take toward change in the direction of My will for your life will result in more of his death. The number one desire of your reborn spirit is to accomplish My will, regardless of any consequences regarding self preservation. Your new man has no fear of change. He trusts completely in the leadership of My Spirit. That is why the two are completely hostile to one another, and why no compromise is possible. The old man cannot be reasoned with. He must die.
